KISSING ST. PETER'S TO

I think most people imagine it must be a dark, solemn, ancient-looking place, but it is nothing of the kind. There is no "dim, religious light," there are no obscure corners into which one must peer carefully to discover hidden treasures of art. St. Peter's is light in every part, and bears few marks of age compared with most of the churches in Rome, and it is a most satisfactory place to visit, because, whether the day be sunny or stormy, hot or cold, the light is always good, and the atmosphere never changes from an agreeable, even temperature. I was not long in discovering the famous bronze statue of St. Peter, which, by the way, was never intended to represent him at all, the best authorities now agreeing that it was meant for Jupiter. But, however that may be, this very rude and inartistic figure has long done duty as a representative head of the Church, and on this first and all my succeeding visits there was a sort of fascination for me in watching the never-ceasing stream of people doing "honor" to the statue. St. Peter sits on a fine marble throne placed against the last column on the right side of the nave; one foot is extended so as to be in reach of the faithful, and upon the great toe have been imprinted so many kisses that the original digit was long ago worn away, and the new one in gilded bronze will probably, in its turn, be renewed in the course of a few hundred years if the osculatory practice be kept up so long. It is a sight to behold; old men and maidens, young men and children, high and low, rich and poor, one with another, up they all march, give the sacred toe a little dab with hand or handkerchief, bestow the kiss and travel on, evidently with the pleasing consciousness of a duty performed. A filthy, ragged beggar, a princely in velvet and sealskin, a barefooted Franciscan monk, a long string of little school boys, some of whom must be lifted up by the bigger ones or the priest in charge. I saw all sorts and conditions kissing that world-renowned toe, and did my own embrace of it vicariously. —[Rome Cor. Philadelphia Bulletin.

THE "MUM" SOCIABLE

A Milwaukee Man Experiences Some of its Disadvantages

[Poe's Son.]

"Lead me your revolver," said a young man, with his nose skinned, his eyes blackened, and his white necktie around under his ear, and one tail of his dress coat torn off, as he came into a West Side saloon, with his overcoat on his arm and his overshoes in his hand, and his clothes all covered with snow. "What's the matter with you?" said the bartender, looking ugly at him. "Do you suppose that I am going to lend you a revolver to kill somebody, and then be arrested for being an accessory? Not much! But what's the matter? You look as though you came out of a window. Was anything the matter with the door?"

The young man took a wet towel and sopped the blood off his nose, then went to a mirror and fixed his necktie and turned his back and looked in the glass to see if his absent coat-tail showed much, and then went and leaned on the bar, and looked at the bartender for a moment and said:

"You look like a man that can be trusted, and whose advice it would be safe to follow in an emergency, and I will tell you about this murder that I contemplate, and maybe you can give me some points, as you have no doubt murdered many people. The trouble is right here. Our lodge is to give a 'mum social' this evening. You know what a mum social is. Young people go to a house and sit around all the evening and keep their mouths shut, and never say a word till a signal is given; then they all make up for lost time and talk for all that's out. (Is my nose bleeding yet? Thanks.) They wanted me to go, and I just came from there. That is, I came from the house next door. You see, I went to the wrong house and rung the bell. A man in his shirt-sleeves came to the door and said 'Good evening;' but I wasn't going to be caught speaking because you have to pay a forfeit if you speak. So I just walked right in and pulled off my overcoat and hung it up, and hung my hat on the rack. The man looked a little bit annoyed, but he asked me if the weather was not softening up a little. I smiled, but didn't say anything and walked into the sitting-room. I thought I was the first one there, and I felt very awkward. The man watched me pretty closely, and finally he said I had the advantage of him; and I smiled again, but didn't say anything. Now that I think of it, I noticed that he unbuttoned his shirt-sleeves and began to roll them up. I did not think of it at the time, but his arms were as big as my legs. He asked me to what circumstance he was indebted for the honor of this visit, and I thought he was trying to get me off my guard so I would speak, when they would have the laugh on me; so I smiled one of my best two-for-a-quarter smiles, and looked at him as much as to say, 'You can't play any of your games on the undersigned.' I think he was the crosser man I ever saw, and I wondered what made the committee have the mum sociable at his house. I thought it was time some of the rest of the crowd were coming, and I got up and went to the window to look out, when the man came up behind me and hissed in my ear: 'What is your little game, any way?' Well, I wasn't going to speak, and give myself away, so I looked at him sort of impudent, as much as to say: 'Oh, go and chase yourself around your feet,' and then I thought lightning had struck me. He took me by the throat with one hand, and by the vicinity of the coat-tail with the other hand, and he choked me so my tongue ran out; and his wife screamed and said: 'Don't kill him,' and the man hustled me out into the hall, and opened the front door, and he picked me up bodily, and threw me out into a snow bank five feet deep. I struggled a little going out of the door, and run my nose against the door-casing, and I guess he forgot to let go of my coat-tail when I
